

environmental impact associated with the Concession area, including any and all relief sought in the baseless Lago Agrio Litigation. Chevron representatives met with Attorney General Borja on at least one more occasion (precise date(s) unknown) after this initial meeting to discuss the same subjects.

- On or about August 18, 2003, Chevron representatives met with President Lucio Gutiérrez and Energy Minister Jacinto Valázquez in Quito, Ecuador to discuss the ROE's binding legal and contractual obligations reflected in the settlement and release agreements, and the ROE's and Petroecuador's responsibility and liability for any further remediation or environmental impact associated with the Concession area, including any and all relief sought in the baseless Lago Agrio Litigation.
- On September 24, 2003, Chevron representatives met with President Lucio Gutiérrez, Energy Minister Carlos Arboleda, Finance Minister Mauricio Pozo, and a presidential advisor in New York, New York to discuss the ROE's binding legal and contractual obligations reflected in the settlement and release agreements, and the ROE's and Petroecuador's responsibility and liability for any further remediation or environmental impact associated with the Concession area, including any and all relief sought in the baseless Lago Agrio Litigation.
- In May 2004, Chevron representatives made contact with President Lucio Gutiérrez at the Presidential Palace in Chile and discussed the ROE's binding legal and contractual obligations reflected in the settlement and release agreements, and the ROE's and Petroecuador's responsibility and liability for any further remediation or environmental impact associated with the Concession area, including any and all relief sought in the baseless Lago Agrio Litigation.
- On or about May 20, 2004, Chevron representatives met with Trade Minister Ivonne Baki and her assistant Diego Garcia in Quito, Ecuador to discuss the ROE's binding legal and contractual obligations reflected in the settlement and release agreements, and the ROE's and Petroecuador's responsibility and liability for any further remediation or environmental impact associated with the Concession area, including any and all relief sought in the baseless Lago Agrio Litigation.
- On or about May 20, 2004, Chevron representatives met with Energy Minister Eduardo López and Sub-Secretary for Development Ximena Cardenas in Quito, Ecuador to discuss the ROE's binding legal and contractual obligations reflected in the settlement and release agreements, and the ROE's and Petroecuador's responsibility and liability for any further remediation or environmental impact associated with the Concession area, including any and all relief sought in the baseless Lago Agrio Litigation.
- On or about May 20, 2004, Chevron representatives met with Minister of Government Raúl Baca in Quito, Ecuador to discuss the ROE's binding legal and contractual obligations reflected in the settlement and release agreements, and the ROE's and Petroecuador's responsibility and liability for any further remediation or environmental impact associated with the Concession area, including any and all relief sought in the baseless Lago Agrio Litigation.

- On or about June 21, 2004, Chevron representatives met with Trade Minister Ivonne Baki, Attorney General Borja, the General Consul of the Energy Ministry, “Operations, Energy Ministry,” and Attorney General staff in Quito, Ecuador to discuss the ROE’s binding legal and contractual obligations reflected in the settlement and release agreements, and the ROE’s and Petroecuador’s responsibility and liability for any further remediation or environmental impact associated with the Concession area, including any and all relief sought in the baseless Lago Agrio Litigation.
- In 2004, approximately one week after the meeting with Minister Baki and Attorney General Borja, Chevron representatives met with Attorney General Borja in Quito, Ecuador to discuss the ROE’s binding legal and contractual obligations reflected in the settlement and release agreements, and the ROE’s and Petroecuador’s responsibility and liability for any further remediation or environmental impact associated with the Concession area, including any and all relief sought in the baseless Lago Agrio Litigation.
- In approximately mid-2004, Chevron representatives met with León Febres Cordero, the Majority Leader of the National Congress of Ecuador, near Guayaquil, Ecuador to discuss the ROE’s binding legal and contractual obligations reflected in the settlement and release agreements, and the ROE’s and Petroecuador’s responsibility and liability for any further remediation or environmental impact associated with the Concession area, including any and all relief sought in the baseless Lago Agrio Litigation.
- On several occasions in 2004, Chevron representatives met with Minister of Government Raúl Baca to discuss the ROE’s binding legal and contractual obligations reflected in the settlement and release agreements, and the ROE’s and Petroecuador’s responsibility and liability for any further remediation or environmental impact associated with the Concession area, including any and all relief sought in the baseless Lago Agrio Litigation.
- In 2005, Chevron representatives had contact with Trade Minister Ivonne Baki and the Minister of Finance at a panel for the Council of the Americas in Washington, D.C., during which the parties discussed the ROE’s binding legal and contractual obligations reflected in the settlement and release agreements, and the ROE’s and Petroecuador’s responsibility and liability for any further remediation or environmental impact associated with the Concession area, including any and all relief sought in the baseless Lago Agrio Litigation.
- On two occasions in the spring of 2005, Chevron representatives met with legal counsel for then President Alfredo Palacio to discuss the ROE’s binding legal and contractual obligations reflected in the settlement and release agreements, and the ROE's and Petroecuador's responsibility and liability for any further remediation or environmental impact associated with the Concession area, including any and all relief sought in the baseless Lago Agrio Litigation.

- In May 2005, Chevron representatives met with Vice President Nicanor Alejandro Serrano to discuss the ROE's binding legal and contractual obligations reflected in the settlement and release agreements, and the ROE's and Petroecuador's responsibility and liability for any further remediation or environmental impact associated with the Concession area, including any and all relief sought in the baseless Lago Agrio Litigation.
- In July 2005 or July 2006, Chevron representatives met with Minister of Energy Ivan Rodriguez to discuss the ROE's binding legal and contractual obligations reflected in the settlement and release agreements, and the ROE's and Petroecuador's responsibility and liability for any further remediation or environmental impact associated with the Concession area, including any and all relief sought in the baseless Lago Agrio Litigation.
- On August 2, 2005, Chevron representatives met with Vice President Nicanor Alejandro Serrano in Quito, Ecuador to discuss the ROE's binding legal and contractual obligations reflected in the settlement and release agreements, and the ROE's and Petroecuador's responsibility and liability for any further remediation or environmental impact associated with the Concession area, including any and all relief sought in the baseless Lago Agrio Litigation.
- On August 2, 2005, Chevron representatives met with Maximilliano Donso Vallejo, Secretary General to the President, Dr. Roberto González Torre, President's Counsel, and an unidentified representative of the Energy Ministry in Quito, Ecuador to discuss the ROE's binding legal and contractual obligations reflected in the settlement and release agreements, and the ROE's and Petroecuador's responsibility and liability for any further remediation or environmental impact associated with the Concession area, including any and all relief sought in the baseless Lago Agrio Litigation. (Toward the end of the meeting, President Alfredo Palacio joined briefly.)
- On February 19, 2008, Chevron representatives met with Gustavo Larrea, the Coordinating Minister for Internal and External Security. Also present was Juan Parra, a member of Larrea's staff, and Ivonne Baki, president of the Andean Parliament and former ROE Trade Minister. The participants discussed the ROE's binding legal and contractual obligations reflected in the settlement and release agreements, and the ROE's and Petroecuador's responsibility and liability for any further remediation or environmental impact associated with the Concession area, including any and all relief sought in the baseless Lago Agrio Litigation.
- On July 24, 2008, Chevron representatives met with Gustavo Larrea, the Coordinating Minister for Internal and External Security in Washington, D.C. Also present were Andrés Valivieso Anda, Maria Sol Correal, and Juan Carlos Castrillón,